Contributors

NEAL ROSS HOLTAN, a native Iowan, graduated from St. Olaf College before medical school at the University of Iowa, internal medicine residency at Hennepin County Medical Center, and a public health degree from the University of Minnesota. During his medical career, now retired, he practiced medicine and public health. Later, he earned a Ph.D. in the history of medicine at Minnesota with an interest in genetics, reproductive health, and public health.

BRADY WINSLOW is a historian of migration, religion, violence, and citizenship in nineteenth-century America. He recently earned a Ph.D. in history from Texas Christian University and is working on a book manuscript that examines the receptivity to Mormonism in the upper Mississippi River valley from 1830 to 1860.
