Upstream Metropolis

An Urban Biography of Omaha and Council Bluffs

BY LAWRENCE H. LARSEN, BARBARA J. COTTRELL, HARL A. DALSTROM, AND KAY CALAMÉ DALSTROM

From its birth as interdependent towns on the Missouri River frontier to its emergence as a metropolis straddling two states, Omaha–Council Bluffs has been one of the great urban construction projects in the nation's history. Upstream Metropolis provides the first comprehensive history of this unique urban region that ranks 60th among the 370 major metropolitan areas in the United States.

Contributors

LYNDIA McDOWELL CARTER is an independent researcher, writer, and historian living in Springville, Utah. Formerly a school-teacher with a specialty in Utah history, in the early 1990s she began researching the Mormon handcart migration. With coauthor Gary Long, she is completing a book on the Willie handcart company.

STEVEN F. FAUX is chair and associate professor of psychology at Drake University, where he also served as director of the honors program. In 2005 he received the university's "Teacher of the Year" award in part for his undergraduate course on nineteenth-century Mormon pioneers and their movements in the Midwest.

WILLIAM G. HARTLEY is associate professor of history at Brigham Young University, former President of the Mormon History Association and founding president of the Mormon Trails Association. He recently authored Sacred Places: Iowa and Nebraska, a Comprehensive Guide to Early LDS Historical Sites (2006).

DON H. SMITH is a retired orthodontist and independent researcher. Since learning that his children were descendants of James G. Willie, captain of one of the handcart companies to suffer disaster in Wyoming, he has spent 36 years researching the details of the Mormon handcart emigration of 1856.

FRED E. WOODS is professor of church history and doctrine at Brigham Young University and occupies the Richard L. Evans Chair for Religious Understanding. He is the author of dozens of articles and several books dealing with Mormon migration in the nineteenth century.
