Contributors

DOUGLAS FIRTH ANDERSON is professor emeritus of history and interim reference librarian and archivist at Northwestern College, Orange City (his blog is <http://buffalodoug.wordpress.com>). A co-author of Orange City (Arcadia Publishing, 2014), he has also published two articles on Iowa Congressman, Civil War general, and U.S. Indian Inspector William Vandever (1817–1893). He is currently researching Henry Hospers (1830–1901), the leader of the Dutch colonists of Sioux County.

ROBERT COOK is professor of American history at the University of Sussex in England. He is the author of several books and articles on nineteenth- and twentieth-century U.S. history, including Civil War Senator: William Pitt Fessenden and the Fight to Save the American Republic (2011) and, with William Barney and Elizabeth Varon, Secession Winter (2013). He is currently writing a British Academy-funded history of Civil War memory since 1865.

BREANNE ROBERTSON is a postdoctoral fellow at Crystal Bridges Museum of American Art. Her research focus on issues of race, national identity, and cross-cultural exchange. Her current book project considers U.S. artists' treatment of ancient Mesoamerican themes in relation to President Franklin D. Roosevelt's foreign policy initiatives in Latin America during World War II.
