An Indian Pot

A new addition to the remains of an Indian burial ground found in West Des Moines, Iowa, July, 1963, may be viewed on the third floor of the State Historical Museum. In honor of her husband and his father, Mrs. Frank Brady and son, Pat, have donated a pot that was found when excavating a construction site for a nursing home, the location in which all the remains were uncovered. (See Annals, Volume 37, Number 2, "The Mystery of the Crosses" by Otto Knauth.)

The first photograph is of the newly acquired pot, in near perfect condition. The second picture is of two restored pots and potsherds that were also found in the area and have been on display for some time.
