Reviews and critical comments:

If Cinéma calendrier is any indication, "Editions Dada" is in the process of accomplishing a miracle—and setting standards thereby. The roughhewn splendor of Cinéma calendrier indicates that the series is going to be faithful to the spirit of Dada and the spirit of fine book production—demonstrating thereby that these spirits are in concord, not in conflict.

Peter Frank

A major example of the best kind of fusion between the researcher's work and the printer's art, the series promises an excellence which should not go unremarked.

Richard Sheppard, University of East Anglia

With the "Editions Dada" Cinéma calendrier you have rendered an inestimable service to the lover of fine books who does not have the good fortune to possess the originals which are jealously guarded by the collectors.

Henri Béhar, Université de la Sorbonne Nouvelle

This facsimile is a luxury item that belies the anti-art, anti-materialistic Dada tenets Tzara and Arp espoused. Therein lie the considerable ironies of this lovely object.

Recommended for advanced research art libraries at universities and museums and for special book collections. Choice

A charming and witty book . . . its essential character is quite successfully captured. . . . Here the reprint—which includes very good translations of the poems by Mary Ann Caws—is satisfying in and of itself . . . It is a delight to have.

Dada/Surrealism

A journal sponsored by the Association for the Study of Dada and Surrealism, published and distributed by The University of Iowa. Dada/Surrealism invites a wide range of approaches to the verbal and visual productions of the two movements seen in their least limited senses as historical and living phenomena. We are especially receptive to manuscripts that use interdisciplinary techniques, reexamine basic concepts, or raise theoretical issues of contemporary interest. Each issue is organized around a special topic, and contains an updated, comprehensive bibliography on Dada and Surrealism in art and literature.
