SUSAN EATS DINNER ALONE

Shannon M. Smith

The air is ripe tonight, and the kitchen table is unclean. The tabby cat crunches his lonely cat-food in the corner, and the ordered-in Peking Duck is quiet, though polite.

Sadie, that woozy, woeful bitch, snuffs her muzzle into her two front paws and sleeps, while General Electric commands: Wake Up, Little Susie, Wake Up.

Susie's slipped her darling Mickey a you-know-what, and where he's gone, nobody knows. She robes herself in her glory and blows with the wind onto the front porch.

She shrieks: O lead on, neon planets, electric stars! The pine trees drop their cones quickly in the wild air. They are silent; they have known this secret all along.