

Snow Diary

I know what it feels like to be gazed at.

And the torment of being loved.

I can imagine myself
finally gone.

Just think:
there's a small death

inside
every moment.

I can't remember.
But there are photographs.

Then the film
goes blank.

The elsewhere of death
and its white blinding salve—