

The Empty Notebook Interrogates Itself

The empty notebook wonders about existence. It wants to know how blank space can fill a void, how emptiness can be a burden. When a page detaches itself, the empty notebook feels pain ruffle its edges. The empty notebook thinks emptiness contains something more than nothing, but is filled with possibility, with longing, with the urge to start from scratch.