

AT LOON LAKE

No rain out there, but black clouds roiling. A boy beneath the green rubber poncho his mother'd worn.
He sits inside it like a tent.

Bare feet in the water. Crouched on a stone. Resigned that he's too slow to catch the bait minnows, but riveted there, watching them flash.