

THE OTHER BLACKBIRD

There's something
about the way
the cattails sway

in the summer
breeze, how they
hold together, how

each stand springs
from rhizomes—roots
that shoot toward

the sky, both male
and female—waiting
for the red-winged

91

blackbird to bend it
over toward the other
blackbird staring back.
