

Valentine

Sorry, but I just don't love you more than Darwinism.

More than: *Farmers take their animals to feed
upon the alpine balds.*

I don't love you more than this cheese slice which tastes of Swiss feet.

I don't love you more than falling off the button lift, or haul lines,

or deciding whether peanut M&Ms are treats or snacks.

I don't love you more than old darkneses
and sipping from thimbles.

I just don't love you.
I just don't love you more than pizza.

Or the final scenes of Clue.
Or colored chalk.
Or what Clive Owen's jaws are made out of.

I don't love you more than the social imagination.
Or more than NPR on Sunday.

Or my own face, glyphed
with tulip pollen.

I don't love you more than the word classic.
Or my afro.
Or this badass wrestling singlet.

No. But you're better off.
I'd only cause you grief, in time.

Abandon you for someone jazzy, more hirsute—
Probably. I guess.

I mean, maybe if you stepped into the singlet right now.
Theoretically. Just to see.

Wait— Wait—
(...)

Nope.