

AND THE WORLD MAY INHERIT US

Cloth to cover you,
simple, your wrist ticking
with cold geography.

Come home. The moon's
last ovation stunned me.

The blue air, the rich leaven
of lamplight
are woven

for hallowing
these nerves worn to epistles
of penury,

our salutation.