

JULIE CARR

(equivocal)

If that bird in my hand and that bear in the trees were to read what I store in the crease of my eye, if the green infant shoots and the blond bomb blooms in the garden we measured with the width of our arms, in the gate-guarded seed-spill we plotted and pooled might our nativity carry our cure?