

Under a Rim of Shade · Katherine Kane

It is October as I pray, the waterfowl are worried in their dear pear skin.

This morning I saw one floating wrong on the river and a strong dog swim.

Now my house-garage feels like a model of the first ark, God.

Let the animals in.
Let this be a good roof,
a mainsail,

match me a soul on this trip if You will.
My woodstove in fall

releases the same warmth one occasionally feels standing near a horse.

You who see all can see the horse my friend carved by the door. I sometimes stand him in the grass, buffed and in two places cracked, but his life is not so bad!

I keep having to go back to old lonelinesses.

Teach me like the river
how to glide in limber, living in the light there is.
