

Mid-October · Scott H. Mulrane

The combines gnash their teeth and snarl at the north wind.

A red bi-plane dusts
the air with hornet voices.

The winter wheat makes ruled pages of the glistening soil.

I shuffle toward sleep, aware of mice rattling the leaves—

they can beg for hell for all that I care. I'm no god.