

Two Poems · Irving Feldman

Art of the Haiku

Master's fingertip
where he stopped—right here—went back, counted syllables.

The Labyrinth

The labyrinth you penetrate evolved from its central chamber.
And what seems to you—invading, cursing—the maze's artfulness is the false starts of its maker desperate to find a way out.