

L.S. KLATT

SUFFUSED

—the half-ton heart of the blue whale. God, not cowed before the half-ton heart, tells the whale to intersect a vanishing point, which is the sky plowed under. And David Hockney says God may be even greater than a loss of hearing, so as to sound out the notwithstanding. Wherefore God bleeds profusely out of the picture in light of the void, which is the fermata of the half-ton heart.