

CONTRIBUTORS:

PHILIP D. JORDAN, professor emeritus of history, University of Minnesota, is a native of Burlington, Iowa and now resides there. Author of fourteen books, including four juveniles, and of more than five hundred articles and reviews in both historical and popular journals, his primary interests lie in the fields of nineteenth-century medical and legal history. He taught at The University of Iowa, where he earned the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in history; at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio; and lectured at the University of Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, and the University of Birmingham, England. A life member of the State Historical Society of Iowa, he also is a member of numerous state and national historical associations, including the American Society for Legal History and Western Writers of America. He is a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society of England. Presently, he is president of the Board of Trustees, Burlington Free Public Library, and a Curator of the State Historical Society of Iowa.

Neither the State Historical Society of Iowa nor the editors assume any responsibility for statements of fact or opinion made by contributors.