ENTERED AS SECOND CLASS MATTER JULY 28 1920 AT THE POST OFFICE AT IOWA CITY IOWA
UNDER THE ACT OF AUGUST 24 1912

THE PURPOSE OF THIS MAGAZINE

THE PALIMPSEST, issued monthly by the State Historical Society of Iowa, is devoted to the dissemination of Iowa History. Supplementing the other publications of this Society, it aims to present the materials of Iowa History in a form that is attractive and a style that is popular in the best sense—to the end that the story of our Commonwealth may be more widely read and cherished.

THE MEANING OF PALIMPSEST

In early times a palimpsest was a parchment or other material from which one or more writings had been erased to give room for later records. But the erasures were not always complete; and so it became the fascinating task of scholars not only to translate the later records but also to reconstruct the original writings by deciphering the dim fragments of letters partly erased and partly covered by subsequent texts.

The history of Iowa may be likened to a palimpsest which holds the records of successive generations. To decipher these records of the past, reconstruct them, and tell the stories which they contain is the task of those who write history.

A Yankee-Hawkeye

Back in the pre-radio days, before the chief executive of the United States could appeal to national public opinion in fireside talks or in more formal addresses, the ebullient, unpredictable Theodore Roosevelt found something of an equivalent in well-timed news releases in which the country was informed of proposed, often startling, changes in policies and personnel.

The White House headlines were truly impressive in these years, but few were more surprising than the official announcement of the appointment as Secretary of the Treasury of a lawyer-banker from Denison, Iowa, a rural county seat of about 2,800 inhabitants, hitherto known only as the center of an eastern land company's investments and as the home of one of the world's most famous breeders of Aberdeen-Angus cattle.

Leslie Mortier Shaw — the individual thus suddenly brought to a key position of political and economic leadership — had, it was known, just completed two highly creditable terms as Governor of Iowa, he had been an active regional campaign speaker in 1896 and 1900, and he was a prominent lay leader in the Methodist Church. But he was not a recognized leader in national politics or in big business. The public, it seemed, had a great deal to learn about the new Secretary of the Treasury.

The future statesman and financier was a son of the Green Mountain State, born on November 2, 1848, two years after his adopted Commonwealth entered the Union. His ancestors were of thrifty, independent, God-fearing New England stock, notably interested in education. His mother's family provided teachers for country and village schools, and his father had been a teacher before he turned to farming. The boy completed his preliminary education in the People's Free Academy of Morristown, a designation that marked the transition from the private preparatory or finishing school to the many-purposed public high school.

According to well-established tradition, the young man's career was given direction by an academic exercise; he prepared a graduating essay on "The Great West" and was so impressed by his subject that he was led to seek the opportunities he described. With all regard to the student's descriptive and narrative powers, it is probable that, like another famous Vermonter, Stephen A. Douglas, he found Vermont a good State in which to be born, but not so attractive for an ambitious career.

At any rate, his eighteenth year (1869) found him on an uncle's farm in eastern Iowa, among members of a family evidently no less inclined to education than those back east, and he soon followed his cousins to the neighboring Cornell College, which was completing the second decade of its devoted service. The thrifty and impecunious student, without benefit of hitch-hiking, walked the forty miles to the college town, sustained on the way by a lunch of crackers and cheese. This humble initiation into higher education was by no means unusual in the Middle West of this period.

Nor were his vacation labors to secure the money for his collegiate support unusual, except in the effectiveness of his undertakings. To the usual harvest work and country-school teaching, he added salesmanship of apple trees, and he carried on his sales campaign so widely and persistently that he became a sort of commercialized Johnny Appleseed for Iowa. Indeed, so thorough and persuasive was his sales appeal, that after paying his college expenses at Mount Vernon and at the Iowa Law School at Des Moines he had, in place of the expected "college debts", a comfortable nest egg of $1,000 with which to start his law practice. He attributed his success largely to honest presentation of his stock and fair treatment of his competitors, for, he said, it never paid "to run the other fellow down. Praise him and you indirectly recommend yourself and your commodities."

From his extended survey of the State as a salesman, he chose for a professional location the small town of Denison in the still sparsely settled western area where apparently his contacts had been unusually favorable. He soon married the daughter of one of the pioneer settlers and he supplemented the small fees of a fledgling lawyer by sales of nursery stock in the surrounding territory. This was in many ways an excellent experience for a young business and professional man with a natural bent for investments. Banking, land investment, and law naturally integrated and the young lawyer and his partners added a banking business in the home town, with branches later in Manilla and Charter Oak.

The pressing need of the Iowa community, he perceived, was for adequate loans at reasonable rates, while in his native State of Vermont the loaning agencies, especially savings banks, were unable to find adequate, well-secured investments.

Since he understood so well the interests and points of view of both regions the opportunity to bring lender and borrower together did not knock twice. His business connections brought profit and satisfaction to all involved and there were no losses on these transactions even in the hard times of the nineties.

So the lawyer-banker had prospered in business and served his community as well. He was one of the founders and the chief contributor to the Denison Normal and Business College which rendered excellent regional service, especially in teacher training, for many years. He was active in his local church as a Sunday school teacher and represented the Des Moines Conference of the Methodist Church in four general conferences. He served for many years on the board of trustees of Cornell College, his alma mater. The only public office that he held or sought in these early years was that of director of the local school board.

He might have continued as a prosperous business and professional man and a respected and useful community leader, if he had not been aroused to wider and larger public service by the free silver crusade, a threat, he thought, to the very foundations of the existing economic and social order.

After an invasion of his home city by the youth-fully vigorous William Jennings Bryan in February, 1896, a group of fearful business associates, failing to secure outside talent of requisite caliber, persuaded Shaw to reply to the populist allegations and proposals. This he did so effectively at home and later as a delegate to the St. Louis convention in 1896, that he was called upon by the State central committee for campaign addresses.

In defiance of regulation stump-speaking procedure, he resorted to the devices of charts and diagrams to show the interrelations of the currency, prices, and income — supplementing such academic techniques with personal experiences and racy anecdotes. With such a judicious mingling of logical and psychological appeals his three score speeches definitely helped to counteract the appeals of the "Boy Orator" to discouraged farmers and small-business men. In the judgment of the astute observer, Cyrenus Cole, Shaw was "the miracle man of the hustings that year."

The country banker steadily gained recognition as a monetary authority. In 1898 he was permanent chairman of the International Monetary Conference in Indianapolis. In 1900 he campaigned with the vice-presidential candidate, Theodore Roosevelt, in Iowa and South Dakota, assuming the burden of the financial discussion.

Meanwhile the State-wide reputation and acquaintances acquired in 1896 had led to his nomination for Governor of Iowa the following year and to his subsequent two terms of service in a period of returning and extending good times. Like President McKinley for the nation as a whole, Governor Shaw might have been termed "the advance agent of prosperity" for Iowa. In his first inaugural he made the confident prediction that the country was "entering upon a period of improved conditions", and four years later, in his second biennial message, he reported: "The State is in a flourishing condition. Her people are prosperous. If there be discontent anywhere or among any class, it is not manifest."

He had sought to direct this prosperity constructively rather than to drift along upon its crest. In addition to the outstanding achievement of the creation of a Board of Control for custodial institutions, he strongly urged, and secured in part, more adequate support for public education at all levels, encouragement for teacher training in privately supported institutions, highway improvement, equalization of assessment, and an extension of the parole system.

Popular approval of the Governor and his policies was shown in 1899 in his reelection by a nearly doubled plurality. He might, indeed, have been the first Governor to break the precedent against three continuous terms but for an early and aggressive announcement of candidacy by Albert B. Cummins, who felt that he was being pushed aside by the conservative wing of the party. Succession to a Senate seat at this time was blocked by distinguished rivals, so Shaw retired to private life and the call to the second place in the Cabinet was most opportune.

The appointment was no less a distinction for the Secretary's home State. The new honor brought to Iowa a greater influence than it had ever before exercised in national affairs. With Shaw heading the Treasury Department and "Tama Jim" Wilson the Department of Agriculture, with Senators as able and distinguished as Allison and Dolliver, and with Colonel David B. Henderson, Speaker of the House, assuring to the State a half dozen chairmanships of leading committees, the saying that Iowa must be consulted on all important party measures was more than a cloakroom wisecrack.

Various reasons have been advanced for the crowning step in the recognition of the prairie State, which was naturally resented in the East. The official explanation by the President and the Secretary's friends was simply the favorable impression that Shaw had made upon Roosevelt in the campaign tour of 1900. There was no doubt an element of truth in the President's reported appreciation of a man who could discuss financial issues so that, as he said, even he could understand them.

A quite different explanation, though one not necessarily contradictory of the other, was given by H. H. Kohlsaar, the Chicago editor. According to his recollections, T. R. had believed that Shaw would be his only serious rival for the nomination in 1904, due apparently to his appeal to influential business interests, East and West, and the journalist had advised that the potential rival be placed at the head of the Treasury Department where he would be out of the running and at the same time give assurance to jittery financiers.

The Nation and other unfriendly critics of the Secretary's policies maintained that the appointment of a man whose whole economic and political philosophy was so opposed to that of his chief was dictated solely "by political expediency". If this were the determining motive, it was one of those cases in which, in a personal contest, the courageous colonel tended to be over-fearful. With the growing progressive tendency in Iowa, Shaw was hardly in a position to secure united endorsement as a favorite son and his support by large business interests was doubtful.

In a period of critical inelasticity in bank credit in the face of rapidly expanding business undertakings, the new Secretary made unprecedented interpretations of the national banking act; he liberalized the security provision and waived the reserve requirements for deposits of government funds with the banks. In addition, he deliberately withheld and extended deposits to meet seasonal demands, stimulated the importation of gold, and arbitrarily influenced the expansion and contraction of note issues. In general, drastic, forthright — many said highhanded — policies, that rested upon extensions of authority never before assumed, were adopted to adjust an antiquated credit system to the conditions of modern exchange.

Ironically enough, the controls essayed by such a confirmed individualist were condemned as paternalistic. A searching analysis entitled "The Treasury and the Banks Under Secretary Shaw" appeared in the Quarterly Journal of Economics for August, 1907, by A. Piatt Andrew, Professor of Economics at Harvard, later Representative in Congress and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. After reviewing at length six innovations from past practices, the writer concluded that the departures were highly objectionable legally and still more so economically. No less condemnatory was the veteran liberal editor and economist, Horace White, in the 1908 revision of his well-known manual, Money and Banking Illustrated by American History.

The liberal journals were outraged at what they regarded as deliberate and irregular favoritism to the "money interests". The Secretary's ostentatious advocacy of extreme protection, on every possible occasion, was equally objectionable to many of his critics, but it is probable that the practical financier felt no anxiety over the strictures of research articles, college textbooks, or, least of all, "radical" journals. Shaw's extreme position on the tariff, however, became an embarrassment to the administration and in 1905 there were persistent rumors of his retirement, a step strongly favored by some of those high in party councils. But with a caution for which he was not always credited, the President postponed the change until the spring of 1907 when the withdrawal was made in good order, just before the "bankers' panic".

Like many western public men, Shaw remained in the East after his retirement from national office. George E. Roberts had written at the time of his appointment in 1902 that the ex-Governor "has in him a good deal of the typical Yankee modified by Western influence" and a Washington correspondent once described him as "an Eastern man with Western characteristics". In business outlook, however, it was a question how far the Yankee had been "modified". For a year or so he headed a New York bank and later for a time one in Philadelphia. In 1908 he was an avowed aspirant for the presidency but his candidacy did not get far. As head of the Treasury and as a business executive, he had taken an ultra-conservative position, and a period of threatening insurgency and rising progressivism made him unavailable as a candidate.

In addition to supervision of his investments, Shaw gave much time in his later years to lectures at Chautauquas, which he termed the old camp-meeting combined with modern vaudeville, to inspirational addresses to college assemblies, and to highly personalized writings on matters of current controversy. His political and social philosophy, as well as his views of the passing scene in general, were epitomized in his books on Current Issues and Vanishing Landmarks: The Trend Toward Bolshevism. His projected magnum opus on the protective tariff was never written but it was hardly needed, for his arguments were reiterated in some form in most of his addresses and writings.

After 1913 the elder statesman was a resident of the national capital where he was an interested, if not always complacent, observer of the course of national and international affairs. In his old age he was the oracle of the political group in the "amen corner" of the Wardman Park Hotel; as a story-teller, reminiscent philosopher, and political prophet he was accorded precedence.

There was bound to be much in these years of which he disapproved; in fact he came more and more to be a chronic viewer-with-alarm. He was a caustic critic of Wilson's methods and program and of the League of Nations. His fellow Vermonter, Calvin Coolidge, met his standards so fully, however, that he advocated a third term, in spite of all precedents to the contrary. The Hawley-Smoot tariff naturally had his full approval. His last public statement was characteristic — an endorsement, in March, 1931, of the veto of the Muscle Shoals Bill. He died on March 28, 1932.

In his political and social philosophy, Leslie M. Shaw suggests comparison with a no less pronounced conservative on the other side of the Missouri River, J. Sterling Morton of Nebraska. Both were devoted to the maintenance of the traditional business and social order, as they understood it, however much they might differ as to particular policies, notably the tariff. The Iowan, however, had certain distinct advantages. He was a resident of a State of surer production, with consequent greater stability and conformity. Only at rare intervals and under great provocation was there effective revolt in the "Vermont of the West". Then, too, down to disillusioned old age, when his views ceased to be of concern for his career, the shrewd Yankee was able to adjust himself more readily to realities — to tolerate a degree of progressivism. For practical purposes, he "accepted the universe", which Morton could never bring himself to do fully.

Leslie M. Shaw — lawyer, banker, community leader, politician, and statesman — was thus able to demonstrate to the age of the disappearing frontier that the tradition of "the poor boy making good in a big way" was not confined to the fables and homilies of a success cult with such votaries as Russell H. Conwell, Elbert Hubbard, Orison S. Marden, and Joe Chapple. The individualist, who in old age became an alarmist, belonged to a generation whose external landmarks were indeed "vanishing", but there are lessons that the present generation might learn from his long, active, and withal serviceable career.

The WAVES at Cedar Falls

A good-looking young woman in a beautifully tailored tweed suit was among the passengers who stepped from a train at Cedar Falls, Iowa, on December 15, 1942. On her shoulder was an orchid, the last gift of fellow associates in the metropolitan office in which she had worked. "Here, you may have this", she said, handing the corsage to the Pullman porter, "I'm giving them up for the duration."

She was one of the one thousand and fifty young women who reported to the Naval Training School on the campus of Iowa State Teachers College at Cedar Falls as members of the first indoctrination class. The Iowa "boot" school for enlisted members of the Women Appointed for Voluntary Emergency Service (WAVES) was the first of its kind in the nation.

The opening of the school was marked with no pomp and ceremony, but with plenty of hard work. Navy officers, in uniforms with gold or blue braid, met every train, both day and night, and loaded recruits into buses bound for the campus. Young women from every State in the Union were logged in and rapidly billeted.

Those first apprentice seamen V-10 were not quite sure what was expected of them, but they knew the Navy had special ways of doing things and they were determined to meet the challenge. One of them had heard that the Navy made bed corners square, so the travel-worn recruits arriving between two and three A.M. and assigned to sleep on mattresses on the floor until bunks could be set up, struggled to make the required square corners before retiring!

They were not long left in doubt as to their duties. Captain Ransom K. Davis, who had been on convoy duty in the Pacific was in charge. He told them, "To the Navy, each one of you represents a fighting man". And the schedule was set up as nearly like other naval activities as possible. The "boots" were divided into two battalions with two companies in each battalion. The companies in turn were divided into four platoons. And thenceforth the WAVES were seen marching in military formations.

Captain Davis, according to one story, had glanced at the orders which sent him to Cedar Falls, and seeing the word Iowa, had thought he was being assigned to the famous battleship Iowa. In spite of his initial disappointment, however, he developed a decided affection for his command.

The staff sent to Iowa to train the first enlisted women in the Navy included both men and women officers and a ship's company of about fifty men. The officers included Lt. Comdr. E. E. Pettee serving as Executive Officer under Captain Davis; Lt. Margaret C. Disert, Officer in Charge of Seamen; Lt. W. H. Fetridge (author of "The First Navy Reader" and "The Second Navy Reader"), Instruction Officer; Lt. Comdr. Tom B. Marwil and Lt. Edgar Sherrin, Medical Officers; Ens. Ruth Houghton, Senior Nurse; Ens. Mary K. Brown, Dietitian; Ens. Edith Gentry, Physical Training Officer; Ens. Juliet Brussel, Drill Officer; Ens. Gladys Henderson (Gladys Hearst), Public Relations Officer; and Lt. Walter Lake, Chaplain.

Uniforming the "motley crew" of civilians was accomplished at Black's Department Store in Waterloo and at the Hughes Store in Cedar Falls. Gym suits were not available for three months, however, and the physical training classes presented an assorted variety of slacks, rompers, shorts, and even pajamas.

Winter uniforms were designed by Mainbocher and were of navy blue. Blouses were either navy blue or white. Ties for the navy were robin's egg blue and for the white (dress) uniforms they were black. Summer uniforms were dresses of grey and white seersucker with black ties for everyday wear and all white for dress. Rank for the women officers was indicated by robin's egg blue stripes and the usual insignia.

Enlisted women slept in barracks in the dormitory at the Iowa State Teachers College and were supervised by house mothers. Officers had individual rooms. The administrative personnel had quarters in Cedar Falls. The food was Navy fare (excellent) and both the mess for enlisted women and the officers' dining room were in charge of the college cafeteria.

When the first indoctrination class graduated on January 14, 1943, Captain Davis expressed his satisfaction with the work. They were sent out as seamen second class, some to specialized schools for further training as hospital apprentices, machinist's mates, aviation metalsmiths, and aerographer's mates, some to direct assignment as yeoman strikers.

The second class arrived, and with them came about 150 SPARS. Until July, 1943, when a Coast Guard school was opened in Florida, SPARS continued to share Navy indoctrination facilities in Cedar Falls and in New York and also the specialized training schools. Lt. Comdr. Mildred H. McAfee, commander of the WAVES, visited the station on January 29, 1943.

The February issue of the Iowave, published by and for the WAVES at Cedar Falls, carried the headline announcement that on March 1, 1943, 420 Army Aviation Cadets would arrive on the campus for a five-months course preparatory to intensive ground training at pre-flight schools. For the fifteen months following their arrival, the sidewalks of ISTC echoed to the tramp of both khaki and blue-clad platoons, and the campus rang with Air Corps as well as Navy songs.

Plans to convert the Cedar Falls school from indoctrination to yeoman training were announced early in 1943, and the first yeoman training began in April. During the transition period there were classes of indoctrinees receiving basic training, yeoman classes made up of seamen who had received boot training here, and some classes of yeomen who had been indoctrinated at Hunter College.

The shift meant change in teaching personnel; the testing groups left and Women's Reserve officers who had been commercial teachers took their places. Eight and twelve week courses of yeoman instruction were organized, including shorthand, typing, naval forms and correspondence, filing, office procedure, as well as physical education, military customs, and current events.

On May 10, 1943, Captain Davis turned over the command of the station to his successor, Commander E. E. Pettee. In his farewell address, he said, "I have seen the spirit with which class after class of trainees have responded to their training. I have come to realize how really capable, enthusiastic, loyal, and patriotic the WAVES are, and I hope to spread the good word about them wherever I may go." The May number of the Iowave contained this farewell pledge to Captain Davis: "The WAVES will be the best, and the best of the WAVES will be IOWAVES."

The new commanding officer, Commander E. E. Pettee, had been, by his own statement, one of the first to "join the WAVES". One fine August morning, he related, papers were handed to him, ordering him to Northampton in connection with the first WAVE school. He was considerably dismayed. He "huffed and puffed", and waved his orders in the face of his more-than-sympathetic commanding officer with remarks to the effect that they couldn't do that to him. But they could, and they did. Later he had to admit that he found the duty "pleasant, interesting, absorbing, and well worthwhile."

The first yeoman class was graduated on May 28, 1943, with Commander Pettee as their speaker. The following class had, as guests, representatives of the WAVE-SPAR Mothers' Club of Minneapolis and St. Paul who lived with their daughters in Navy routine for a day and a half.

Iowa WAVES in training celebrated the first birthday of their organization on July 30, 1943. The birthday cake was cut outside the Rose Lounge of Bartlett Hall by Dean Alice Lloyd, member of the Women's Reserve Educational Advisory Council. Visitors were invited to demonstrations of typing and physical training activities and to the regimental review and inspection.

As class succeeded class through 1943 and 1944, remarks by the commanding officer at the time of graduation became an established tradition, lending humor and inspiration to the final exercises. On one occasion Commander Pettee said: "We who observe from the sidelines can note better than you yourselves what you have acquired since you have been in the service. You have more poise, more self-confidence, a better military bearing, greater understanding of what the Navy expects of you, and certainly higher technical skills." Speakers for the twenty-five graduating exercises held during 1943 to 1945 included both civilians and Army and Navy officers. Among these were four women.

As graduation followed graduation, the WAVES in training continued to have good times in addition to their full schedule of class work. A succession of shows produced included "Anybody's Headache", "The U.S.S. Terrific", "States on Parade", "The Ancient Mariner", "The Casta-WAVES", "Convention of Veterans — 1955", a combined Army-Navy musical featuring the "Jive Bombers", and "R.I.P."

On Christmas Eve, 1943, each trainee placed a shoe outside her door to receive Santa's gifts. Some left notes addressed to the good old Saint. One prospective yeoman wrote:

To: Santa Claus.

Via: The Chain of Command.

1. How about a pair of arch supporters?

Other requests included oranges, shoe-shines, nylon hose, billets in California, special soldiers, sailors, and marines, and, especially, little red chevrons. The holiday festivities also included caroling and a Christmas dinner with Army Air Corps Cadets as guests.

Preëminent among the distinguished men of action who visited the station was Admiral W. D. Leahy, Chief of Staff to President Franklin D. Roosevelt. His noticeable tenseness on that visit was explained the following day, June 6, 1944, by the news of the invasion of Europe.

The WAVES' second birthday, in July, 1944, was celebrated nationally by the launching of two motor torpedo boats, bought with the $1,080,000 from bonds purchased by the Women's Reserve personnel. In Cedar Falls the birthday was the occasion for an open house at Bartlett Hall for 500 civilian guests, who observed teaching and recreation, inspected medical facilities, and met staff members and trainees. In the afternoon a large group of WAVES went to the farms near Reinbeck, Iowa, to help detassel corn.

With keen nostalgia for happy days at this station, trainees, ship's company, and officers stationed in Cedar Falls will long remember their experiences. One Iowa WAVE wrote that she would always cherish the memory of the chimes of the Campanile — good cheer at mess — the crunch of snow on a sub-zero morning — the glorious colors of the autumn and miracle of an Iowa spring — laundry and popcorn lines at 1630 each day — a July bond rally at which survivors of the band of the U. S. S. Helena played — trainees singing "Auld Lang Syne" at graduation — Muriel Schell Sullivan's "WAVES Victory Hymn" as sung by the choir — hoping for a "ship-shape" from inspection — that uneasy waiting for interviews and orders — that catch in her throat as she watched reviews and participated in graduation exercises.

During the closing days of the school the same spirit of unity and coöperation prevailed. All hands worked together at any task which needed doing. Here is an account written by a trainee in the last group at Cedar Falls:

The out-going sections were practically tossed out of bed on their noses last Tuesday morning, when the DB's (Destruction Battalion) took over, with "physical assistance" in the decommissioning of Bartlett.

It all began when sixteen hardy souls, to avoid the rigors of a PT class, volunteered their services for a mysterious detail, but it ended with the whole section hard at work tearing down bunks, shoving chairs around, neatly stacking mattresses in the East Lounge, and escorting bed springs down TOO many stairs. . . . One absent-minded seaman took the nuts and bolts out of the top bunk and then sat on the lower. (She was taken to sick bay in a dazed condition.)

Battered and bruised, aching in every muscle, but with a definite sense of accomplishment, the weary She-bees have been considering striking for Carpenter's Mate using as a recommendation their experience in the "Battle of the Bedsteads".

This article is a salute to that spirit and to Gladys Gooding, who assisted in its preparation.
